A HIGHFALUTIN JUDGE.—Busteed, who some time since laid aside the shoulder-straps of a brigadier to assume the ermine of a circuit judge in Alabama, has lately delivered a "charge" in Montgomery, which must have astonished the grand jury, and the people generally, considerably more than any of Busteed's charges in the field. Considering that he was addressing a grand jury, he presented a strange mixture of politics, pedantry, and poetry, own and another man's-the following, from party may require, and that the books and pa the introduction to the charge, will serve as a sample for the whole:

"I congratulate you anew. Public order is moves gracefully and naturally to the accomplishment of its legitimate purposes. Agriculture embraces the plough-hare and the scythe; the hammer and the anvil meet together in the deep resoundings of the forge; commerce is tasked to answer the demands of export and import; merchandise wears its busiest front; the sculptor his chisel in hand, as beneath his fashioning touch, the marble 'timidly languishes into life;' the painter, with brush and easel, grasps from what would otherwise be decay and forgetfulness 'leaves that fall glowing numbers to song; and the minstrel I shall proceed to execute said decree. tunes afresh his reed, and sings:

The Southern Poems of the War: Collected and arranged by Mi-s EMILY V. MASON. Baltimore: MURPHY & Co.

While Potomac flows to the sea, and the Blue Ridge points to the sky, some scores of the ballads and songs collected in this beautiful volume will baunt the firesides of our southern land, and will stir the blood of children yet un born, as the song of Chevy Chase stirred Sir Philip Sidney. That a great national cause has been stamped out in bood only makes its mel dies more dear to the deseated and to their enilaren's children. Jacobite relics, sung by Scottish hearths, move tears to-day. And who knows not the power of Irish lyrics, and even Moore's elegant modern expression of them, over the hearts of dwellers in the Green Isle? To be sure the lament or defiance poured fourth in song from the indignant hearts of the defeated is often treated as a crime by the dominant race; and ballads have teen, even in our own day, made the subject of indictments in Ireland. So we are not sure that the republication of the Poems of the South may not be regarded at Washington as one of the evidences of the "bad spirit" which is said still to prevail in this country; and Miss Mason's compilation may be quoted in Congress as one of the reasous for keeping us longer in the condition of
